

Bipolar Explorers

Are you interested in being part of a group that explores issues about manic-depression/bipolar...

Is bipolar an illness like physical illnesses?

Is bipolar "just who I am"...a core aspect of people's personality?

Whilst medication can be part of the solution, can it also sometimes be part of the problem?

Can mania be thought of as a reaction to stress?

How important is sleep in avoiding manic states?

When people come off medication are the rebound effects sometimes interpreted as 'relapse' rather than withdrawal?

What do people find helpful when in manic or depressive states?

How challenging can it be to live with someone diagnosed as bipolar?

What are the good things about being manic? Is the middle ground always best?

It is hoped that the group might bring people together who:

(i) wish to explore such questions

(ii) want to learn from each other

(iii) want to find new ways of thinking about and coping with difficulties.
